The de Kaap muscle is a rarely used muscle which arises from the ventral portion of the coracobrachialis and inserts on the extensor carpi radialis longus. During its function, it inserts on the trochlear ridge and the ulnar part of the coronoid process. The conventional surgical approach for de Kaap repair is through a standard lateral approach to the elbow. We report two cases of complete transposition of the de Kaap muscle to the flexor retinaculum and review the surgical literature on the transposition of the de Kaap muscle into the flexor retinaculum.Q: What do the symbols * and @ mean for HTML? I just learned how to use HTML, and in my reading of it I saw this kind of syntax a few times: That's an anchor tag with an href. I also saw this It looks like it's something like a comment to the HTML parser/renderer, but I cannot find the information about it in any documentation I've found. I also tried searching for other symbols like @ and # and none of those work. A: These are often ba244e880a
