The antiphospholipid syndrome (APS) is a relatively new clinical entity characterized by arterial and/or venous thrombosis and/or pregnancy morbidity, associated with antiphospholipid antibodies, including anticardiolipin antibodies. Its pathogenesis is thought to be based on the participation of an IgG1a isotype of antiphospholipid antibodies in the induction of procoagulant and proinflammatory events, leading to both venous and arterial thrombotic events, and possibly, to pregnancy morbidity. This article presents a review of the pathogenesis, clinical features, diagnosis, and management of this syndrome. FILED NOT FOR PUBLICATION
